Pathwork Lecture 31: Shame

1996 Edition, Original Given June 6, 1958

This lecture is given in an expanded poetic format, what I call a Devotional Format of the lecture, and in that sense this is my interpretation of the intent of the lecture. I may have interpreted portions differently from you, and I ask you to ponder the words for your own interpretation. I did this Devotional Format so I can take the words into my heart, phrase by phrase, much as I would in reading poetry – that is, devotionally.

The blessings to me in developing this format have been truly profound, and my wish is that this Devotional Format will be a blessing to others. I invite you to slowly read and ponder this format of the text – with an open heart to experience the Guide's Presence and Love emerging from among the words such that the wisdom comes to LIVE you.

For clarity: The original text is in bold and italicized. [My adds of commentary/clarification/interpretation are in brackets, italicized, and not bolded.] To learn more of my Devotional Format and see the lectures I have done in this way, go to https://www.garyvollbracht.com/pathwork-lectures-devotional-format/

03	Greetings in the Name of the Lord.  I bring you blessings, my friends, • to each one of you and • to all your dear ones.
04	When we spirits observe human beings, we can see how badly you need spiritual nourishment.

• Your body is nourished,
as is your intellect

and even
    • your emotional nature - though the latter not always with the best possible food.
But when it comes to • spiritual nourishment, most human beings
            starve themselves.
There is a great confusion about what spiritual nourishment really means.
It does not merely mean to • read,
         • hear, or • learn about
                • spiritual truth or • law, about
                • God and
                • His creation.
It does
    not even mean
         • prayer and • meditation which, of course,
                if done in the right way, is also a very important part of spiritual nourishment.
However,
    the most important substance of spiritual food is • self-development.

```
Your • innermost self, vour
    • divine spark,
is constantly crying out
           for this food [i.e., crying out for self-development], but your conscious being refuses to hear the cry [for self-development].
When you are
    • sad or
    • depressed, when you are

    dissatisfied

         with your life whether for
                • actual and • rational reasons or not,
it is always because your spirit
                is starved.
Only that person can be truly • happy and • fulfilled who partakes of this most important food:
            spiritual development.
For there is no human being alive who has not the opportunity to become happy.

```
It [i.e., your happiness] is in your hands,
         my friends.
But
    you so often
         • turn the wrong way;
    you
         • seek happiness in the wrong direction;
    you
         • blame others for your misfortunes;
    you
         • blame fate,
    you
         • blame God;
    you
         • blame the alleged injustice of the world.
But
    you • do not take the one and only step that leads you to fulfillment through a deep sense of having lived your life the way your Creator had it in mind for you in this particular incarnation.
It varies, of course,
    with each individual,
for not everyone has to fulfill an incarnation in the same way.
The same
    • work or • effort is not expected of everyone.

But
                  the one thing
                       you should keep in mind,
                          my friends,
              is that if you are not quite happy in spite of occasional outer difficulties, you have denied your spirit
                          some of the nourishment it craves – most probably in the right way
                                             of
                                                 • self-development and
                                                 • self-recognition.
              Anyone
                   • hearing or
                   • reading these words
              has sufficient means to acquire this food [of self-development and self-recognition].
05 In my previous lectures I have mentioned several attitudes
                       in the human soul
                          which are what you might call God-eclipsing.
              Last time I explained that
                   • pride, • self-will, and • fear • underlie
                          • all faults and
                       • are responsible for
                          • all unhappiness
                          • all untruth
                              that exists in the human soul.

To continue this series of lectures on self-development, I will discuss tonight
                   a new subject:
                              shame.
06
              There is a • right kind and a • wrong kind of shame.
              The
                       of shame
              is true repentance.
              Without
                  this [right] kind of shame, there could never be an incentive for self-development.
              Without it [i.e., without this right kind of shame], no one would ever undergo the noble fight, my friends, against one's lower self;
              no one
                   would take the path of purification if this [right kind of] shame did not exist within.

True repentance is therefore
                       • constructive and
                       • very positive.
              But there is also shame of the wrong kind.
              Human beings so often confuse
                          the two kinds of shame that now
                  I want to devote some of our time together to this subject.
              What is the wrong kind
                       of shame?
              We might call it a guilt-complex
              which, of course, is entirely

    destructive and

                       • negative.
              What do your emotions
                       actually say - even though you certainly do not consciously think so - when you have
                              the wrong kind of shame?
              They [i.e., your emotions] say:
                       "I am
                          hopelessly bad, and there is nothing that can be done about it."

With this attitude [that you are hopelessly bad and nothing can be done about it] you
         not only
            • wallow in self-pity,
         but
            • express a sluggishness that prohibits your working actively on the elimination of that which is wrong
                               within you.
Furthermore, this attitude [that you are hopelessly bad and nothing can be done about it] becomes
         and more
            • unreasonable and
            • unjust, for you
    • demand and expect

    respect and

         • love from others
although you do not • respect and • love
                yourself.
Mind you, this [lack of respect and love for yourself] is not because of your shortcomings.

In the deepest regions of your being you cannot respect yourself
                              because of
                                 • the wrong attitude,
                                 • the wrong kind of shame that makes you • passive where you should be • active.
08 Thus,
                  you find yourself
                       in a vicious circle:
                              the more you
                                   deny to yourself the experience of the constructive shame that would make you · lift yourself up and • work on yourself with realistic self-recognition - the foundation of self-development -
                              the more you
                                 despise yourself.
                               The more you
                                 do that [i.e., the more you despise yourself], the more you need to demand
                                      • love and

                                        from others
                                             to make up for the lack of self-respect.

```
The • blind, • unconscious, and • immature side of you believes that if you receive sufficient appreciation
                          from others,
                   it will make up for
                       the lack of
                              vou can never truly possess • unless you fulfill the basic spiritual laws within your own soul and • unless you do the maximum of what can be expected of you in self-development according to your overall spiritual development.
09
              I know, my friends, that no one thinks these thoughts [i.e., no one thinks that if others would show you sufficient appreciation and respect, it would make up for your lack of self-respect and you would not have to develop yourself and thereby legitimately and naturally achieve true self-respect] consciously,
              but if you would
                       • test your emotions,
                       • examine their demands as to what they actually • mean and
                              • express, this is what you would find.
```

Remember - and this is very important - your lack of self-respect is not due to vour
                • faults,
                • weaknesses,
                • shortcomings, and • sins - no matter what they may be - but it [i.e., but your lack of self-respect] is due to vour
                • wrong kind of shame.
The moment
    you exchange
         • the wrong shame
         • the right [shame],
I can promise you
    that in the measure this change [from the wrong to the right kind of shame] takes place, you must develop
            • true and
            • justified
                   long before
                       the faults in you have disappeared.
You do
    not have to be perfect in order to respect yourself.
All you have to do [to respect yourself] is to adopt a • realistic and • constructive attitude toward your imperfections.
```

```
The more
                  your self-respect
                       is established, the less you will crave
                       for the respect of others, for you are then resting secure
                       within yourself.
              And this [i.e., And resting secure within yourself] will so change vour
                          • inner attitude and vour
                          • emanations that you will have a different effect on others;
              this [i.e., your different effect on others due to your resting secure within yourself] will make it so much easier for the people around you to actually give you the • love and
                              • respect you desired in the first place.
10 Perhaps it has not occurred to you that
                       the wrong kind of shame
                          • comes from your pride and • furthers your pride even more.
```

This [i.e., the fact that the wrong kind of shame comes from and furthers your pride] may sound paradoxical at first.
Let me explain it this way:
Your lower self with all its shortcomings is a factor to reckon with if you do not want to escape
            your present reality.
The more you
    try to escape
         the facts of your life, the sicker
    your soul must become.
By having the
    wrong kind of shame,
        you do escape reality,
for what your emotions express is that
        vou will not accept yourself as you really are.
The moment you
    hopelessly despair
         about the lower side of your nature, you have
    not accepted yourself
         as you are.
It [i.e., hopelessly despairing about the lower side of your nature] you are lacking the humility of courageously facing everything about yourself - and that is pride.
```

11
              Let me stress once again: Intellectually
                          you know that you are imperfect, but emotionally
                          you don't.
              Often there is a wide chasm between what you know and

                              • think
                       and what your emotions
                               • claim and • desire.
                  not at all difficult to make the emotions conscious
              if only you are willing to take the trouble to translate them [i.e., to translate your emotions] concise thoughts, but it [i.e., but this translation of emotions into concise thoughts] needs a little effort.
                  claim perfection before this perfection can be yours.
              You place yourself higher than the efforts you have so far taken would warrant.

At the same time [that you place yourself higher on the ladder toward perfection than the efforts you have so far taken would warrant], vou do • know, or at least
    • feel, that you are not there yet.
Instead of consciously recognizing this fact [i.e., recognizing that you are not as high on the ladder toward perfection as you think you are] and slowly working up to the point where you want to be, you become angry
    at
         • the world and
           for being what you are and refuse to make the inner effort to become what you want to be.
So
        means
            • pride,
            • laziness,
            • injustice, and
            • escape from your present reality.
This [pride, laziness, injustice, and escape from your present reality] is what makes you feel guilty, my friends, and not the actual faults
        you may possess.
```

These [i.e., the actual faults you may possess] would never make you feel guilty, provided you adopted
         the right kind of shame
            in which you accepted yourself in humility
                       as you are at present, not fleeing
                               from your reality, and thus building up from there [i.e., from where you are now] – slowly, step by step.
It [i.e., this way – accepting where you are and building up slowly from there] is the only • realistic and • constructive way to • change and
                   • develop.
```

12
              The wrong attitude
                  brings further hazards, however.
              Because of
                   • your pride and
                   • your need for

                       • love from others,
             vou
                  begin to withdraw from what you really • think and
                          • feel about yourself and hide it [i.e., hide what your really think and feel about yourself] behind a wall, so to speak.
              You dare not stand up for who you really are because
                  your emotions
                      say that if you were yourself, you would be despised.
              As I said before,
                  the more
                      vou lack
                          self-respect,
                  the more important
                      the respect of others
                          becomes to you.
                  you create a mask self.
             In some subtle way, you become
                       a fake.
```

And that [i.e., And becoming a fake], in turn, makes you
         even more despondent and you despise yourself
         even more.
The vicious circle
    • continues in full force and • carries you into deeper emotional conflicts until you develop the courage and

         • humility to break it.
Please do not confuse standing up for
         who you really are
            which includes your lower self, with giving in to the impulses of your lower self in your deeds.
                There is a vast difference between
                        that [i.e., between giving in to the impulses of your lower self in your deeds and behavior]
                        a simple • recognition and • acceptance of what you are,
                                      building up a different personality for the outside world to appear better.
```

One often establishes a fake "real self" for the very reasons explained here [i.e., in order to appear better than you are].
13 As long as you feel
                       • sad,
                       • bitter, • defiant, or
                       • disharmonious in any way when you encounter your faults,
              you have not yet accepted yourself
                          as you are.
              Again
                  you have to strive for the middle path.
                   • Accepting [your faults and imperfections] does not mean • wanting to stay in a state of imperfection.
              It [i.e., accepting your faults and imperfections] means
                       that you first have to learn to accept your state of imperfection.

You should also find out whether you desire
                          to be cherished for your shortcomings
              as a compensation for
                       imagined inability to • change and thus [i.e., as a compensation for your imagined inability to change, and thus, as a compensation for your imagined inability to]
                              • come to cherish yourself.
              When you have made such and other unreasonable emotions conscious,
              it will be easy
                  to direct them [i.e., to direct your now-conscious emotions] into proper channels.
              When you are capable of really and truly
                       accepting yourself
                          as you are,
                              not desiring to appear better than you are,
              you have fulfilled
                  the basic requirement to be on this path,
                          my friends.
              Before that [i.e., before your are capable of really and truly accepting yourself], vou are not on it [i.e., you are not on this path called pathwork] as yet, but merely in a state of preparation for entering the gate leading to it [i.e., entering the gate leading to this path called pathwork].

In other words,
                  as long as
                       there is the wrong kind of shame in you, you cannot advance on this path;
              you have to exchange it [i.e., exchange the wrong kind of shame]
                       the right kind of shame.
15
              The wrong kind of shame
                  will create a state of mind that is not only
                                 • extremely unhealthy, as I outlined just now, but will also
                                 • make you feel
                                         and more
                                             alone.
              Whenever you
                  feel
                       • lonely and
                       • not understood, please realize that, at least to some degree, the condition I have described [regarding having the wrong kind of shame] must be responsible for it [i.e., must be responsible for your loneliness and for your not being understood]
                       and not
                          other people's lack of • love and • understanding.
```

```
No matter how incapable of love the people around you may be,
              you would never feel lonely
              if this wrong attitude [i.e., this wrong kind of shame where you rely on respect from others to compensate for your own lack of self-respect] were not somehow prevailing within you.
              So do not seek a remedy [to your loneliness and feeling you are misunderstood] from without,
              but [rather] turn around within and look at yourself from this point of view [i.e., from the point of view that you harbor the wrong kind of shame].
16 You, whoever you are,
                  may feel ashamed of something.
              Whether it be
                  • big or small,
                  • grave or unimportant,
              is not the point.
              You cover it [i.e., you cover what you are ashamed of] up;
                      you hide it;
                              you appear to be without that something of which you are ashamed.
```

```
This [hiding of that of which you are ashamed] is the wall that separates you
           from others.
But in this way [i.e., by hiding that of which you are ashamed] you can never be sure that you are really
                • loved and
                • appreciated.
For
    this little voice in you keeps saying:
                "If they only knew
                   • how I really am and • what I have done, they would not love me."
                        That [belief that if others really knew you they would not love you]
                               feel • alone,
                                  • suffering, and
                                  • cold.
You think that all the affection given to you is destined for the person you
                • appear to be and not for the person you • really are.
Of course you are
    • insecure and
    • lonely in that state.
But only you can change it [i.e., only you can change that state] - no one else.
```

17 It will be easy
                  for you to see that the only remedy for this constant state
                                      • loneliness, • insecurity, and
                                      • growing self-despisal is the one step that appears hardest to you, namely
                  to break down the shame and stand up for what you really are.
              The more
                  you try
                       • the other way,
                       • the way of subtle deception, the deeper your dilemma will be.
                              You have seen that.
              So it is up to you
                       to take the one courageous step of becoming yourself and [thereby] gaining true
                                             • security and the

    appreciation

                                                of your friends.

For they [i.e., For your friends] who are
         • spiritually developed and • capable of love will most certainly not love you less;
quite the contrary.
And they [i.e., And your friends, on the other hand,] who are • immature and therefore
         • incapable of love will not be retracting their love for you since
            • they never really gave it [i.e., never really gave you love]
            • nor did you ever really own it [i.e., nor did you really own their love].
                For such people [i.e., those who are immature and incapable of love] find themselves in exactly the same spot as you are in now:
                                • craving for
                                   • affection, • respect, and
                                   • love to assuage their own
```

lack of self-respect,

do not have the courage to be themselves.

Their kind of love was an illusion in the first place.

absent

because they too

So the only way to build a secure ground on which to stand is to stop the pretense you have laboriously cultivated all your life. This seems a hard step at first, my friends. 18 Again, I want to stress that you are not expected to tell your secrets to everyone you meet. Choose the right person to open up to; choose the person who can help you. Then choose the people with whom you are really close and those who know you as you really are. Otherwise, you can never be yourself.

It [i.e., opening up honestly to another] is not a question of what you
            • say, but rather of what you
            • feel;
    a question of your
            • inner attitude.
    adjust your emotions from
            • the wrong kind of shame
        to
            • the right kind,
all you have to do
    is delve into your emotions
and, as I so often say, translate them [i.e., translate your emotions]
            • clear-cut
            • concise thoughts.
Then,
    when you see the unreasonableness of the immature side of your soul, you can readjust them [i.e., readjust your emotions].
Only when you do that [i.e., only when you see the unreasonableness of the immature side of your soul and readjust your emotions accordingly] will you be able to take the next step.
Only then [when your have readjusted your emotions] will you have security and

         • self-respect.
```

For as long as you hide behind a wall of falsity,
you must despise yourself - [despise yourself]
            much more than a brother or sister of yours who may have many more weaknesses but
                                  who has the courage to • live without pretense and • act according to the real self [will despise himself or herself].
It is
    not
         • how good you are or • how many weaknesses you still have that determines
    your self-respect.
Self-respect -
           and as a result of it also the respect of others -
    can only be measured by • how true you are to yourself, or
         • how much you
            • deceive and
            • escape yourself, · how much you hide behind a wall of pretense.
```

```
This wall of pretense [you hide behind] is not something easily recognizable from the outside.
              It [i.e., the wall of pretense you hide behind] is something subtle within that only you yourself
                                  can find,
                                      by
                                         • testing and
                                         • probing your emotions and

                                              • their meaning.
19 True repentance
                   in the positive sense
                       means
                          • to simply take stock of the self and
                          • to accept its weaknesses in their present state,
                                  with the deep desire to change.
              At the same time you need to acknowledge that the change can only come by again
                                      and again

    recognizing the deeply ingrained faults and • comparing

                                                 • the faulty reactions
                                              to
                                                 • the ideal state.
              Thus
                  you learn humility.
```

20
              The moment
                  you do not wish to appear • better or • more than you are,
                                 even in your own eyes,
             you will have taken yourself down from the high place
                         in which you have put yourself.
              You can start rebuilding only after you have torn down
                      the false edifice.
             If you have the courage to • stumble a thousand times over
                              the same faults and • forever lift yourself up to try again,
              then
                  • you pay God the debt
                      you owe Him;
              then
                  • you are worthy of His grace;
              then
                  • you are truly
                         on the path.

Then
    you rid yourself of • pride and falsity
           long before
               you are perfect in all the details of your personality.
Thus
    you approach perfection much faster than you think, in spite of some of your stubborn shortcomings that linger on.
In that way
    you must win.
But
    if every time after having stumbled again
                the same fault
                   • you become so despondent
                          that you
                              despair of yourself, wishing to give up, and
                   • you consider self-acceptance
                          to be senseless,
    then
        you have the
           • destructive and
           • weakening kind of shame,
                   which will never get you anywhere.

For as long as you despair so easily, there is too much pride in you,
              and then the
                  • healing,
                  • curative action of being able to observe your own weaknesses in the true light of what they are, neither
                                             • exaggerating nor • diminishing them, will not be able to affect your soul.
21
              So, my friends,
                  do not despair
                       if you have no success for quite a while in overcoming
                                     your weaknesses.
              You may perhaps understand now
                      that here [in the right kind of shame and right kind of self-acceptance] you have a great curative agent for remedying something [that is] even more important than the actual weakness
                                                              you are treating.

You will learn
    the right kind of
         • shame and • self-acceptance,
which
    • brings humility,
    • overcomes pride, and
    • shows you how to live
            in your own reality.
If you were soon
         very successful in overcoming
                your individual faults, it might make you
    even prouder,
and pride [here, that is, pride of having overcome some of your faults] is more harmful
        than
            many other faults.
Apart from that [i.e., apart from pride that might arise if you soon overcame the faults you are so battling against], the faults
    you are battling against have been ingrained in you often for many incarnations, so you cannot expect to get rid of them within a few years.
```

However,
                  • if you are capable of facing these weaknesses;
                  • if you
                       • meet them [i.e., meet your weaknesses] with
                              • open eyes and
                              • a healthy attitude and • learn even while you are still stumbling over them;
                  • if you have the humility to face yourself knowing where you really belong - • not too low,
                                 • nor too high -
              then even though you are still imperfect, you are laying the foundation to a very
                          • healthy and
                          • normal inner attitude.
22
              • Think and • meditate about this,
                       my friends.
```

```
It is not sufficient to just • hear or • read my words
                                  once, for that [i.e., reading or hearing my words only once]
                   will not be the kind of spiritual food that helps you to discover where
                                  • your feelings still deviate from
                                  • the ideal state.
              Find the echo [of my words]
                   within you
              to direct you in your daily • strivings and in your daily
                          • spiritual work.
               When you do that,
                  you will be giving yourself the food
                          your spirit needs.
23 Perhaps you now begin to sense why it is so necessary to be able to talk openly about yourself
                                  to
                                      • a qualified person and then
                                  to
                                       • the people
                                         you are really close to.

For as long as you keep things hidden
         within you,
everything
    gets out of proportion.
         You may
                • exaggerate one thing
            and
                • underestimate another.
         But a person who is detached from your problems and

                   • your inner struggles may see things [in and about you] in the right light.
As I have often said in private sessions, there is a spiritual law which applies equally to • psychoanalysis
        and
            • confession.
         It is the law of brotherhood.
The moment
    you open up
         to another person, you risk
    an act of humility.
    • that moment
with
    • that person
you do not want to appear more perfect
            than you are.

That [i.e., wanting to appear to another person more perfect than you are] is one of the most harmful
                          human tendencies,
                              my friends.
              When you show yourself to one person
                       as you are,
              you will instantly
                      feel the relief
                              your spirit
                                 has cried for,
                                     even if
                                        that person
                                            does not give you a single piece of advice.
24
              Your spirit
                  suffers
              when you act against its laws.
              And you feel better all of a sudden when you are able to humbly
                       reveal yourself.
                       The law of brotherhood
                          is working.

Something in you says,
         "At this moment
            I do not want to appear better than I am.
            I want to show myself as I am;
            I do not strive for respect and

                        • love that I think is not really due me because of the things of which I am ashamed." Though
    you are wrong in that too,
           for
                • love and • respect are due every living creature, but you think they [i.e., love and respect] are not due you
                        because of something
                               you keep in hiding.
And in this distorted view [distorted because you keep part of yourself in hiding]
    • you suffer loneliness and
    • you go on pretending in some subtle way [i.e., pretending by keeping some part of yourself in hiding in order to appear more perfect than you are].

The wrong kind of shame
                  also violates the law of brotherhood.
              Thus you may see once again how every inner feeling
                              can be right when it comes from the godself.
              However,
                  the same [inner feeling] can be distorted
                          by luciferic powers.
              It is so also with shame [i.e., shame can be right when it comes from the godself or it can be wrong when it is distorted by luciferic powers].
25 So I say to you, my friends, when you
                       really and truly
                          desire
                              to develop along this path vou will find guidance
                          at a certain point.
              You will be almost pushed into a corner where you will open up for your own salvation.

Of course,
    you always have your free will and this [free will] we spirits
        will • respect at all times and • never violate it,
                even if we do know what may seem so difficult
                               for you to express.
But
    vou
        have to do the talking.
We will not do it
        for you.
    always free, therefore, to • refuse and
            • retire deeper into your corner and • resent that you are being pushed in this direction.
However,
    you can also take the opportunity
            and
                • step out of your hiding place, • open your eyes, and • see that herein lies your salvation.
It is up to you.

26 When guidance appears in the form of an unpleasant test,
              you cannot
                  fully understand what is happening.
              Yet it [i.e., the guidance appearing in the form of an unpleasant test] is there to help you do what is necessary.
              Such an opening up
                       of your personality
                          is healing.
              You think of these experiences
                      as hardships.
              Once you understand, however,
                  why they are necessary
              you will cease to see them in that way.
              You are like
                  children;
              you do not know what is good for you.
              And God's helpers
                  who are all around you constantly –
                              particularly with the person who is willing to take this path of purification - manage to • guide and • inspire people [i.e., people around you and others who influence you] to create situations which afford you the opportunity [for development].

But
                  you have to decide with your free will whether or not you want to learn from them [i.e., learn from the situations brought to you by other people, people who are guided and inspired by God's helpers to create situations for your growth and purification].
              You can either
                  • open your eyes to the significance of the situation, or you can
                  • shirk from the issue and
                  • refuse to recognize the call,
              for it is a call!
              Decide,
                  my friends.
                       • Do you want to take your courage
                              into your own hands, or
                       • do you think that you can advance on this path without summoning the courage to follow the call?
27
              I can promise you one thing.
              After you have made the decision to take this path, you will already
                  feel a foretaste of the spiritual rebirth that must come sooner or later when a certain phase is reached.

The greater
    • the effort and
    • the apparent difficulty
         of
            • recognizing the call and
            • following it,
the more
    • relief, the more
    • victory, the more
    • happiness, the more
    • self-respect, and the more
    • inner
         • joy and • peace will you feel after
            • the test is over and • vou have fully understood how to go on from there.
This, my friends,
    I beg you
         to remember very well.
Do not choose to forget these words, secretly thinking that if you manage to evade the issue the situation
                will cease to exist.
Read my words
    every day, whenever you are faced with such a decision.
```

28
              We deal
                  not only with what you consciously

    know and

                              • hide.
                              That is comparatively easy.
              Once you are able to reveal consciously hidden
                          • thoughts and
                          • feelings, you need,
                  with our help,
                       to try to find what unconscious currents lie behind them.
                              That is then
                                 the work to be done.
              Of course, you cannot do so [i.e., you cannot find the unconscious currents behind your consciously hidden thoughts and feelings] alone;
              and you cannot do so unless you have displayed the courage to bring into the open
                                 what you do know.
              Most people carry hidden unconscious factors equally active as the conscious ones [i.e., equally active as the hidden conscious factors].
              Those [i.e., the hidden unconscious factors] are a little more complicated to find.

The first prerequisite [to finding the hidden unconscious factors behind the hidden conscious factors] is to be • free and • open enough to be able to talk about everything pertaining to your person. You can never reach the hidden • motives, • currents, and • emotions without that [i.e., without being able to talk about everything pertaining to your person]. 29 If you fulfill the necessary requirements, help will be given to you that you can be sure of. The help you need is the grace of God. Without it [i.e., without the grace of God] you cannot reach your • unconscious and • stubbornly hidden shames blocking the way.

    if you wait for the grace of God in • defiance and
                • anger, saying to yourself,
                   • "Why can't I have it [i.e., Why can't I have grace]?
                   • Why someone else
                       and not me?
                   • I have suffered so much.
                   • I am due for it now;
                   • I have tried so hard," then you
    push away
        the time for grace,
because your attitude is not humble.
You take it upon yourself to judge,
and
    you cannot judge.
You have no way
    of judging
        • how much you have suffered, and • when the grace is due, and • how hard you have tried, especially in comparison with others.

You lack • comparison; you even lack • complete self-recognition, for as long as you cannot delve into what your unconscious hides, you do not know yourself. And how can you dare to • judge and • compare if you don't even know yourself? 30 When you nurse a spirit of true • humility and • patience, then the grace, my dear ones, will be much nearer. If you have difficulties, try to concentrate on this.

If you cannot advance, although you are • working and • doing your best and many do not advance because they are not working the way they could, so it is not the lack of grace - and if there are blocks you cannot seem to penetrate, ask yourself, "How humble is my attitude?" Nurse these words instead of turning away from God the moment things become difficult for you. This is my advice for my dear, beloved friends. 31 I should like to discuss one more subject before we turn to your questions. I have already mentioned that you are ashamed of your faults. Most of them [i.e., most of your faults] you wish you did not have.

However,
    there is also another category [of faults besides those faults you wish you did not have],
and it will be important to look at your faults from this new point of view, namely,
    that you have some faults which you are in love with.
This [i.e., having faults you are in love with] explains why you do not get ahead in some particular respect of your development.
You do not admit it, but you are actually quite proud of some of your faults.
Of course,
    as long as
        this is true,
you cannot possibly
    overcome them [i.e., overcome the faults you are in love with].
Find out how this applies to you.
Once you are aware
    that you are emotionally attached to some of your faults,
pray that God
    may help you to recognize
            • why this is so and • what lies behind it.

Pray that you may be able to see this attitude [i.e., the attitude of loving some of your faults] in an objective light, so as to develop
                       the right kind of shame
                          about it.
32
              Check
                   • all your faults and
                   • your emotional reactions to them [i.e., emotional reactions to all your faults] in all honesty.
              As you go through your list, vou will see that there are
                          • some faults you really do not like and • others you cherish in some way.
              Then,
                   when you feel that attachment [to a particular fault you cherish in some way], ask yourself:
                   "How would I react
                       if another person were to display
                               the same fault
                                  either in
                                      • the same way or perhaps in
                                      • a slightly different way?"
              You are actually
                   often quite irritated when another human being displays the same fault you are somewhat proud of in yourself.

```
Once you approach the fault from this point of view [i.e., from the point of view of how you would see others having this fault], you will lose the pride
                       you take in it.
              As long as
                   the pride persists,
                       however,
              you cannot possibly
                   overcome the fault.
33
              I will be very happy to let you present to me any fault you choose for analysis.
              I will show you
                   how every one of them is connected with • pride, • self-will, and
                               • fear.
              I will show you
                   • how to analyze the fault, • how it leads to other faults, and • what is connected with it - and in this way help you to better self-understanding.
              I will show you
                   how to
                       • meditate on it [i.e., how to meditate on a particular fault] and • proceed, in this particular way, with the spiritual work on your path.

```
I will also show you
    how every single
            • fault, • weakness, or
            • imperfection is a direct hindrance
         • to love - and therefore [direct hindrance]
         • to God.
I will also point out what the underlying good quality
                 behind each fault
                    is,
for there is no fault
         that is not a distortion of something
                        • good and
                         • pure.
Try this [i.e., try to find how your faults are a distortion of something good and pure] as an exercise yourself;
apply it to your faults,
for your spiritual work is useless
if it is

    abstract and

    • impersonal.
Where you are unable to do so [i.e., unable to see your faults as a distortion of something good and pure], bring the faults here.

The
                  real need [of the spirit] is not recognized
              and therefore the wrong satisfaction is sought.
              However,
                  the case you mention
                      is not as much of an extreme as you think.
              Often
                  a human being • opens up about many little things, and even
                       • exposes actual shortcomings,
              so as
                  to keep the real issue hidden.
36
              QUESTION:
              But what if that same person
                       • masks the true faults and • invents artificial guilts
                             to divulge?

37 ANSWER:
              That happens.
              You see,
                   it will not do any good to tell such a person to choose to open up to the right people, because
                       he will never know
                          who
                               the right people are.
                       • The intuition is lacking, as well as
                       • the sound intellectual judgment.
              Neither faculty [i.e., neither the intuition nor the intellect] can function well as long as one rationalizes and

                   • covers up
                       the true reasons [for indiscriminate opening up to other people].
              Such a person has to be brought to first recognize this fact [i.e., to recognize the fact that the true reasons for indiscriminate opening up must be discovered before one can discern who the who the right people are to whom to open up].
              That, of course,
                   can only be done
                       very slowly.
              And it cannot be done at all if the desire is not there.
              But
                   the desire
                       can grow.
